Topic: Water Stewardship Panel – PFAS and the One Water initiative

Dan Brown, Huron River Watershed Council (HRWC)

PFAS are toxic, synthetic chemicals associated with many health problems. They are used to produce many common products such as apparel and electronics. This contaminant has been found in the Huron River and PFAS pollution is widespread in Michigan. The HRWC has been a leading educator on PFAS pollution and they have facilitated community discussions on the threat of PFAS to the Huron River.

Trevor Layton, Southeast Council of Governments (SEMCOG)

Beginning June 1, communities throughout Southeast Michigan are celebrating Great Lakes and Fresh Water Week by promoting One Water, a brand new initiative from the Freshwater Forum at the Cranbrook Institute of Science, Great Lakes Water Authority, and SEMCOG. The goal of One Water is to support shared responsibility and stewardship for our interrelated drinking water, stormwater, and wastewater systems.

Be sure to pack your own lunch! RSVP Appreciated!
